

Teachers planning to discuss controversial issues in class must ensure objectivity by making a competent effort to research and present varying opinions on each controversial topic. The age and maturity of students must be taken into account when deciding which curriculum materials to present. It is suggested that teachers who are discussing and presenting controversial issues carefully preview all audio-visual aids and seek the advice and expertise of colleagues, department chairpersons, and/or Building Principals.

Adoption date: May 27, 1997

Reviewed: May 22, 2017